Saturday, March 23 • JAPANESE HONEYSUCKLE

Though has beautiful flowers, chokes native plants, shrubs, and trees. Creates dense groundcover in forests preventing native wildflowers from flourishing.

Saturday, April 27 • GARLIC MUSTARD

Known to crowd out native wildflowers and herbaceous plants in forest communities.
Greatly diminishes species diversity.

Saturday, May 18 • JAPANESE KNOTWEED

With a highly invasive root system, this perennial can rapidly take over a forest understory. With dense canopy up to 15 feet tall not much can grow underneath.
Very difficult to remove once it becomes established.

Saturday, June 8 • PORCELAIN BERRY

Highly invasive vine that smothers plants & trees, is easily identified by its multi-colored fruit in late summer/fall. Fills niche of native fox grape (same family Vitaceae) which is a valuable food source for birds & wildlife.

Non-native invasive plants compete with native ones that wildlife depend on.
We encourage the removal of these plants as well as including native plants in your own gardens.
